A bill has been introduced into the New York legislature which appropriates $30,000 to establish schools for teaching the art and practice of dairying, including the best modes of making butter and cheese. The schools are to be in charge of the dairy commissioners of the state; skilled professors and tutors are to be employed. The art of raising poultry is

Maryland has an agriculturist college and experiment station, but as yet no state board of agriculture. At a recent meeting of the Farmers' association it was decided to recommend legislation to secure the creation of a state board.

The weight of opinion at the recent Vermont dairymen's convention seemed to be that warming water for stock pays well, except where warm spring or well water is supplied in warm stables.

Georgia is to have an agricultural ex-riment station, with Cor T. Henderson at the head of it. Baltimbre girls are chock full of grit. One of them recently accepted a wager to walk along the principal street of Baltimore arm in arm with a young man clad in rough working clothing. She won the bet, and then had her picture taken with his.
